

How to Torture Your Teacher

Student 1:

Only raise your hand when you want to sharpen your pencil or go to the bathroom. Repeat every ten minutes.

Student 2:

Never raise your hand when you want to answer a question; instead, yell, “Oooh! Oooh! Oooh!” and then, when the teacher calls on you, say, “I forgot what I was going to say.”

Student 3:

Lean your chair back, take off your shoes, and put your feet up on your desk. Act surprised when the teacher puts all four legs of your chair back on the floor.

Student 4:

Drop the eraser end of your pencil on your desk. See how high it will bounce.

Student 5:

Drop your books on the floor. See how loud a noise you can make.

Student 6:

Hum. Get all your friends to join in.

Student 7:

On the last day of school, lead your classmates in chanting: “No more pencils! No more books! No more teachers’ dirty looks!”

Student 8:

Then, on your way out the door, tell the teacher, “Bet you’re looking forward to summer vacation this year. But I’ll sure miss you. You’re the best teacher I’ve ever had.”

The End

© 1997 by Bruce Lansky. Adapted from the poem in No More Homework! No More Tests!, published by Meadowbrook Press. This classroom theater play version of “How to Torture Your Teacher ” is © 2005 by Meadowbrook Press.

Permission is given for individual school classes to perform this play and to make as many copies of the play as are needed for the students’ use. All other reproduction and performance is prohibited under penalty of law. For use of this play outside individual classes, please contact info@meadowbrookpress.com for permission.